SHE WAS HUNGRY.

How the Poetle Youth Was Reminded of the Realities of Life.

They were sitting on the piazza of the hotel at the beach, watching the moon as it slowly rose out of the slumbering sea. Silence was around them, naught being heard save occasionally the faint clatter of dishes in the adjacent restaurant or the musical hum of an aristocratic musquito that was making as vain a search for a blue blooded person as Diogenes did for an honest man. It was the hour for love, sweet, pure, de-licious love. The youth felt it in his soul as he sat there by the side of the beautiful maiden, whose silken hair almost touched his shoul-der. Suddenly he spoke in low but thrilling and passionate tones:

"To the poetic temperament, to the soul that is capable of feeling the tenderest emotions, that throbs in unison with the harmony of nature, and is susceptible to the influences of the beautiful, there is a peculiar fuscination in a scene like this. The balmy air, the rising moon, the twinkling stars, the contiguity of one of the fairest of creation's most perfect work, all unite to awaten in the heart its softest, tenderest feeling—love. Don't you think so, Mehitable "
